I recently installed Ubuntu on a brand new pc and have 8gb of RAM. It's an amazing PC, but it doesn't seem like it's utilizing all of my RAM. Any suggestions on how to fix this? The system is very snappy, but I'd like to get all of it to work for me. Here's what I did to install: Installed 13.04 64-bit Compiled the latest drivers from the AMD website for my card (64-bit) Copied over the Radeon X.Org driver and the ATI Catalyst driver. I went to Additional Drivers, and checked the box that said, 'Show all available drivers.' I get an error in the AMD catalyst drivers that prevents them from loading. A: Windows programs typically access more memory than you might expect by default, to make it easier for the CPU to draw from. There's nothing to worry about, just make sure that if you notice a system-slowdown, that you're swapping less than you should be. Drug and food interactions of loperamide hydrochloride.
